CCCSS August Meeting Recap

Greetings cactus and succulent enthusiasts! Do you enjoy the Meeting Recap in your monthly newsletter and would you like to know what keeps the club ticking?

Well then, it's time to show your appreciation and interest in CCCSS by volunteering for the honorable position of club secretary. The current secretary is graciously passing the pen. Someone surely has a burning desire to embrace the prestigious post, so don't hesitate, or contemplate, just activate that textual voice of yours and help make our awesome club thrive. Your efforts will be rewarded!

The meeting for August was engaging as usual. Plant of the month was Fouquieria. Check out August's newsletter for an excellent article on Fouquieria. Potential dates for the upcoming Lotus Land trip are Nov. 14 or 24. Speaker of the month was the illustrious CCCSS vice president, Nick Wilkinson. His travelogue through Baja, Mexico was informative, entertaining, and even a bit mystical with ancient Indian site circles that are said to represent portals to the universe or peaks that converge with the stars. Various species of Agave, Dudleya, Mammillaria, Fouquieria, Euphorbia, Pachycereus and Stenocereus were included in the slide show as well as cave paintings and rock formations such as Polar Bear Rock. Yes, it looked like a Polar Bear far from the North Pole! Thank you, Nick, for the educational tour of native cacti and succulents in Baja, Mexico.

Cactaceae

Parodia Speg. Thanks to Edward Anderson, author of The Cactus Family

Parodia comprises cacti that are small, mostly globose, freely producing colorful flowers. *Parodia*s popular among hobbyists and consequently has been subdivided into hundreds of species. The latest thoughts are that Parodia should be broadly interpreted to include Brasilicactus, Brasiliparodia, Eriocactus, Notocactus and Wigginsia. Unfortunately, these scientific conclusions have upset many hobbyists who have argued for continued recognition of related groups, particularly Notocactus, as distinct genera.

For the time being, the International Cactaceae Systematics Group has elected to recognize the broadly defined Parodia with 66 species but maintain Blossfeldia and Frailea as separate.

Parodia was described in 1923 by Carlos Spegazzini to honor Domingo Parodi, an early student of the flora of Paraguay.

Parodia are low growing, either solitary or clustering, globose to cylindrical with ribs or tubercles. Flowers are borne subapically and are open during the day and tend to be funnellform or bell shaped and brightly colored. The seeds are diverse, a feature that has led many to argue for the recognition of several genera.

Parodia are native to South America occurring in Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Paraguay and Uruguay. Culture is typical of most cacti with the usual requirements of free draining soil, letting the plant dry out between waterings and plenty of sun. Like many Cactaceae Parodia may become sunbunt if grown in unrelenting full sun and do prefer some shade during the day, especially when grown in pots.

Common but always nice Parodia magnifica
